What Every Parent Should Know

FACTS TO KNOW

It's behavior that's intentionally hurtful and repetitive, not a one-time act. It usually involves a child with greater physical or social power dominating a child with less. Bullying can take several forms:

- physical (e.g., hitting, shoving, tripping)
- verbal (e.g., name-calling, insults)
- psychological (e.g., rumors, humiliation, social exclusion)

FACTS TO KNOW

It's bullying someone by using computers, cell phones, and other electronic devices to send abusive or threatening messages, spread rumors, or post embarrassing images. Cyberbullies may start online "hate campaigns" against their victims or send messages supposedly from the victims.

TAKE IT SERIOUSLY

Bullying and cyberbullying have become life-threatening issues. Victims may suffer from severe emotional distress and sometimes want to harm themselves or others. If you suspect your child feels depressed, angry, or isolated due to bullying, or has thoughts of suicide or violence, seek counseling for your child right away.
